PREFACE

This report is the third annual report of openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Winter 1970 through Summer 1979. The purpose of the survey is to provide accurate baseline information about the changes in the status of independent institutions during the decade of the seventies. This report will become the basic reference document and will not be duplicated in this format until 1985. However, annual updates and assessments will be published starting in 1981. It is our hope that other researchers utilizing this information will start to investigate why and how these changes took place.

The information for this report was compiled from a survey of state postsecondary agencies and state associations of independent colleges and universities. The study also utilized data compiled in the annual publication of the Education Directory, prepared by the Department of Education, and Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education, prepared by the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation. Every effort was made to verify information contained in this study through contact with national accrediting agencies and individual institutions.

This study could not have been completed without the cooperation of various associations, agencies and institutions. We would like to thank Nancy Dawson, NIICU's secretary who willingly typed several drafts of the report. The full responsibility for the analysis of the data rests with the authors.

OPENINGS, CLOSINGS, MERGERS AND ACCREDITATION STATUS

OF INDEPENDENT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES, WINTER 1970 - SUMMER 1979

In its concern to monitor the health and vitality of the independent sector, the National Institute of Independent Colleges and Universities (NIICU) conducted a study of the openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent, non-profit colleges and universities in the seventies, from Winter 1970 through Summer 1979. This survey now completes the decade of the seventies and will provide NIICU and other observers with the kind of baseline information needed to assess the condition of independent higher education in the 1980's.

Highlights of the Study

-- Foundings in the independent sector ceased to keep up with closings as of 1974, illustrating the "steady state" which has characterized American higher education for the past few years.

-- Ninety-one percent (69) of the institutions opened in the seventies were founded by 1974. Seven institutions were founded in the second half of the decade.

-- From Winter 1970 through Summer 1979, a total of 76 independent colleges and branch campuses were founded: 10 two-year colleges, 34 four-year colleges, and 32 specialized institutions.

-- During this period, 141 independent colleges and branch campuses closed: 45 two-year colleges, 57 four-year colleges, and 39 specialized institutions. Over two-thirds of the two-year and specialized institutions which closed did so in the first half of the decade. However, the number of four-year colleges closing were divided equally between the first and second halves of the decade.

-- In addition to the closings during this period, 45 independent colleges and branch campuses merged with other independent institutions: 9 two-year colleges, 24 four-year colleges, and 12 specialized institutions.

-- Furthermore, 19 independent colleges shifted to public control: nine two-year colleges, six four-year colleges and four specialized institutions.

-- From Winter 1970 through Summer 1979, 358 independent institutions and branch campuses attained accredited status from nationally recognized accrediting agencies: 75 two-year colleges, 168 four-year colleges, and 115 specialized institutions.

Methods Summary

The purpose of this study is to present accurate information on the openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent, non-profit colleges and universities from Winter 1970 through Summer 1979. Because of the nature of this study, there was no attempt to analyze why colleges have opened, closed or merged.

The primary source of information was a survey conducted of state post-secondary agencies and state associations of independent colleges and universities during the summer of 1979. These agencies were asked to verify closings and openings of independent institutions, in their respective states, listed in the Education Directory as of Fall 1978, and to add any changes (additions or corrections) through June 30, 1979. Responses were received from all states and territories.

Another major source for this study was the Education Directory which is now published annually by the U.S. Department of Education. The three criteria used for inclusion in the Education Directory are: (1) accreditation by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or state department of education, (2) preaccreditation status by one of these agencies, or (3) acceptance of an institution's credits as though coming from an accredited institution by at least three accredited institutions. However, since the Education Directory includes only those institutions which report to HEGIS, the final sources of information for this study were state agencies which must record institutions with state charters.

The determination of accreditation status was based on information supplied by national accrediting agencies recognized by the Council on Postsecondary Education. The primary source for verifying this status was Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education 1978-79. Some information was verified through direct contact with institutions and recognized accrediting agencies, particularly in cases where institutions have recently attained preaccredited status.

In the detailed tables which follow, institutions are classified as two-year, four-year or specialized institutions. Information is given about enrollment, founding dates, accreditation status, affiliation, and the date when information about a change of status was recorded in the Education Directory. Changes which did not or have not appeared in the Education Directory are noted on these tables.

There were 76 independent colleges and branch campuses founded within the decade of the 70's that met the criteria[4] for inclusion in the Education Directory. We have no reliable data on the colleges which may have been founded during the period of the study but do not meet these minimum criteria. Of the 76 institutions listed, 10 (13%) were two-year colleges, 34 (45%) were four-year colleges, and 32 (42%) were specialized institutions.

[1]Branch campuses are counted as separate institutions.

[2]Openings for the most part are from the Education Directory, published annually; for Summer 1979, information is from the NIICU survey of post secondary state agencies and state associations of independent higher education.

[3]College Del Ray (AZ) is counted as being founded in 1971 although no founding date is available. It first appeared in the Education Directory in 1972 and closed in 1973.

[4]See Appendix I: Criteria for Listing in the Education Directory.

The most significant finding, and portent of the future, are the trends evident from Table 1 which lists institutions by founding dates. Over ninety percent (69) of the institutions opened since 1970 were founded by 1974. Only seven colleges were founded since 1974. Foundings in the independent sector ceased to keep up with closings as of 1974, signalling the end of a growth period in higher education and graphically illustrating the "steady state" which has characterized American higher education for the past few years. (See Appendix IV: Founding Dates of Accredited Independent Institutions.)

Over four-fifths of the institutions founded were independent of affiliation as illustrated in Figure 1. Over three-quarters of these schools have an enrollment of less than 500 (1978 Fall Headcount Enrollment) which is higher than the total distribution of enrollment nationally at independent institutions. (Almost 61 percent of independent institutions nationally have enrollments below 500.) Only four (5%) of the institutions opened were single sex and these were seminaries.

TWO-YEAR, FOUR-YEAR AND SPECIALIZED INSTITUTIONS,

From Winter 1970 to Summer 1979, 141 independent institutions and branch campuses closed. Of these, 45 (32%) were two-year colleges, 57 (40%) were four-year colleges, and 39 (28%) were specialized institutions. Over two-thirds of the two-year and specialized institutions which closed did so in the first half of the decade. In contrast, the number of four-year colleges closing were divided almost equally between the first five and second five years of the study period. Of the 39 specialized institutions, 34 (87%) were "closed enrollment" institutions; seminaries or religious schools for women and men that served primarily as formation houses.

Out of 141 institutions, 55 percent were church-related although 34 of these 78 schools were "special purpose" religious schools. Figure 5 shows that over 85 percent of the institutions which closed had enrollments under 500. This percentage is significantly higher than enrollment distributions at independent institutions nationally. About three-fifths (61%) of all independent institutions have enrollments under 500. Less than 15 percent of the institutions which closed had enrollments over five hundred. Over three-fifths of the institutions which closed were coed while almost two-fifths were single sex.

MERGERS WITH INDEPENDENT INSTITUTIONS

TWO-YEAR, FOUR-YEAR AND SPECIALIZED INSTITUTIONS,

Total	3	11	5	4	7	4	3	4	1	5	47	100%

During the decade, 47 independent institutions and branch campuses merged with other independent institutions; nine (19%) were two-year colleges; twenty-five (53%) were four-year colleges; and thirteen (28%) were specialized institutions. Most of the colleges merged with institutions within the same state and held regional accreditation at the time of merger. A common pattern among four-year colleges was to merge with another four-year college of similar size and affiliation to form a single university or college. Two-year colleges often merged with four-year colleges which had larger enrollments but similar affiliations.

The majority of the specialized institutions were centers for religious studies. These institutions often merged with other seminaries or divinity schools and the specialized nature of the newly created institution was maintained. Specialized institutions of law, education and psychology, however, often exchanged their specialized status as an individual institution for status as a graduate division or special department within a comprehensive college or university.

Two-thirds of the institutions which merged were church-related while more than one-third were non-sectarian. At the year of their mergers, over 60 percent of these colleges had enrollments below 500, 17 percent had enrollments between 500 and 1000 and 19 percent had enrollments over 1000. Approximately four-fifths of these institutions were coed or coordinate and one-fifth was single sex.

Total	1	2	2	4	3	2	3	0	0	2	19	100%

From Winter 1970 to Summer 1979, 19 independent institutions shifted to public control: nine (47%) were two-year colleges; six (32%) were four-year colleges; and four (21%) were specialized institutions. This category was the only one among the five categories of change studied where more two-year colleges were involved than four-year or specialized institutions. The majority of the two-year colleges shifted to public control prior to 1975. Most joined community college systems or state universities in existence. No four-year or specialized institution has shifted to public control since 1976.

Of this group, Figure 10 shows that only two institutions were church-related and the rest were non-sectarian. Over half of these institutions had enrollments under 500 when they shifted to public control, over one-third had enrollments between 500 and 1000 and one-tenth had enrollments over 1000. All of these institutions were co-educational.

From Winter 1970 through Summer 1979, 358 institutions and branch campuses attained accreditation or candidacy for accreditation status and thus were included in the Education Directory or in Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education. Of these 358 institutions, 75 (21%) were two-year colleges, 168 (47%) were four-year colleges, and 115 (32%) were specialized institutions. The four-year colleges and specialized institutions attaining accredited status within the seventies were evenly divided between the first and second halves of the decade. However, more than half (55%) of the two-year colleges received accreditation status by 1975.

The 358 independent institutions which were accredited or achieved candidacy since 1970 account for one-quarter of the 1452 accredited institutions in the independent sector. (See Appendix IV: Founding Dates of Accredited Independent Institutions.) Of these 358, 57 percent were independent (non-sectarian) and 43 percent had some religious affiliation. Almost two-thirds of these institutions had enrollments below 500, one-fifth had enrollments between 500 and 1000, and less than one-fifth (16%) had enrollments over 1000. Over nine-tenths of these institutions were co-educational.
